BIOGRAPHICAL INFORMATION

Juan Jose Colombo is an executive coach with Executive Coaching Network, Inc. (EXCN). During his career he has taken a special interest in people performance and professional growth, helping in the development of teams and individuals, becoming a translator of ideas and processes (both in language and cultural terms) from the head office into the markets and vice versa. He has based his personal development on a commitment to learning from a diversity of sources, with a focus on understanding the development of extraordinary people growth and team performance guided by articulated strategies.

Juan's career spans 35 years, during which time he worked in advertising and marketing for ten years, and as general manager in different markets in Latin America for a similar period. These experiences culminated with regional responsibilities in Latin America, and his becoming a member of the global executives of two different corporations for the last 12 years of his professional life. Prior to joining EXCN, Juan was president/managing director of Latin America for Guinness/UDV, the largest and most profitable drink company in the world. He held the same position for Cadbury Schweppes. He has held managerial jobs with Beecham (later Smithkline Beecham), Austral Lineas Aereas, Unilever, and J. Walter Thompson.

Juan has a BA degree from the Universidad del Salvador, a Jesuit University in Argentina, and postgraduate studies at the London Business School and MIT Sloan.
